ite the difference! So why does a minecraft day go by so much faster than a real life? It's not just the difference in time, but the way the game's mechanics and physics are designed to make time feel like it's passing much more quickly. This is a common feature in many sandbox games, where the goal is to provide a sense of freedom and exploration without the constraints of real-world time. The game's day-night cycle is a key element of this, with day lasting for 20 minutes of real time and night for 10 minutes. This allows players to spend most of their time exploring and building during the day, while still having a sense of a 24-hour cycle. The game's mechanics are also designed to be forgiving, with many actions being reversible or having low consequences, which further contributes to the feeling of time passing quickly. The game's physics are also designed to be intuitive, with objects falling and moving in a way that feels natural and easy to understand. This makes the game's world feel like a familiar and accessible environment, where players can spend hours exploring and building without feeling like they're wasting their time.
